Splitting communities of interest could be contentious and may cause some back lash. However, after 14 years, we should be moving towards a combined Auckland (or one Auckland) instead of lots of little communities.

I would like to see more collaboration between local boards with the governing body actively supporting this. From an outsiders perspective, it looks like local boards (and ward councilors) spend more time bickering amongst themselves, instead of coming up with better (and cheaper) ways of making Auckland a great place to work and live.

Plus I would like to see less local boards, or possibly more local boards combined together.

Need to include Māori wards and stronger representation in the south Auckland area. It is a population overlooked especially in infrastructure and future proofing spaces, rather its intense development is driving cost of living through the roof!! More representation in the South.
